

Check Out Your Library!

Libraries in Indiana are independent taxing units, similar to towns and school corporations. People living within a library tax district are paying for library services through property taxes and are eligible for a library card at that library for no additional cost. In Huntington County, there are 4 separate library systems.

Indiana law requires libraries to charge a “non-resident fee” for cards for patrons outside the library’s tax district. Libraries must charge a non-resident fee equal to or above operating expenditures divided by district population, otherwise known as per capita spending.

Each library service area is dependent on the tax district boundary.

Note that taxing district boundaries do not always correspond to mailing addresses. A ‘Roanoke’ address may be outside of the town boundaries and outside of the library’s district. An ‘Andrews’ address could be in Polk Township or even Wabash County and outside of that library’s district. Only properties within the library district are taxed for library service.

All libraries in Huntington County offer “non-resident” library cards for that particular library. Because each library system in the county operates independently, the fee for each library’s “non-resident” card will vary according to that library’s per capita spending, as mandated by Indiana law.

Did you know . . . ?

26.3% of Huntington County residents live outside of any library district and are not taxed for library service.

–This does not mean those residents cannot use a library. Libraries offer many services to the public without requiring a library card. These services may include reference information, local history, fax service, copy machines, computer usage, and Internet access.

—It does mean they will not be able to borrow materials from the library unless they purchase a “non-resident” library card for the library of their choice.

The libraries of Huntington County are eager to serve you.
